08:45-09:25	Keynote Speaker Speech 1  DR. YIP MUM WAI Division of Mechanical Engineering Faculty of Engineering and Built Environment Tunku Abdul Rahman University College Jalan Genting Kelang 53300 Setapak, Kuala Lumpur Malaysia ABSTRACT: There is a way to learn and teach innovation in a systematic way, it is called TRIZ or Theory of Inventive Problem Solving. The concept and application of TRIZ tools are discussed in this presentation. A case study of implementation of TRIZ tools such as function analysis, cause and effect chain analysis and contradiction matrix that applied in one of the Manufacturing Industries in Malaysia will be presented. Inventive principles were suggested to solve the problem in this particular industry. Therefore, it can be concluded that TRIZ is a powerful tool in inventive problem solving.
09:25-10:05	Keynote Speaker Speech 2  Professor Donald Chang School of Business Metropolitan State University, USA

	ABSTRACT: In the U.S., there has been a tremendous growth of online courses and programs during the last decade. While the overall resistance is still strong among academia, more higher education institutions have expanded and developed new programs and curriculum to take advantage of the new instructional medium, while modifying existing ones to keep pace with the changing landscaping of the U.S. higher education. Some universities have found its online offerings expanded by ten folds or more within few years, while others have found new frontiers and markets for its programs. Facing the new realities, many U.S. higher education educators and administrators have concluded that avoiding the online instruction medium could be a perilous proposition. Instead of treating online teaching as inadequate or unequal, it may be more productive to consider teaching online as teaching with technologies. By examining the overall trend, implications for college educators are introduced and discussed in details. Strategies and steps in incorporating online instruction delivery medium into curriculum are developed and proposed. For the new generation of higher education educators and administrators, they might find new achievements that are made possible by the new instructional medium.
